

HIPAA compliance program

Are you a small to medium size business and store healthcare information of your patients in digital format (such as convalescent, rest home, care home, group home)? Any organization that handles any individually identifiable health information for insurance purposes is responsible for meeting the HIPAA (Health Insurance Portability & Accountability Act) requirements, to protect the information. There are substantial penalties for non-compliance and open to litigation.

April 2008, Walter Reed Army Medical Center announced that it was "investigating the possible disclosure of personal identifier information through unauthorized sharing of a data file containing the names of approximately one thousand Military Health System beneficiaries." Walter Reed security was breached.

DISC has an assessment program for small to medium size businesses to comply with HIPAA which addresses their business & compliance needs. Compliance with HIPAA helps to alleviate vulnerabilities and protect patient privacy and security.

It's about risk reduction & HIPAA compliance

- Most small to medium size companies don't have experienced information security professionals on their staff.
- Most entrepreneurs and professionals fail to recognize the challenge of identifying and prioritizing the information security risks necessary for business to succeed and comply because you're busy with daily business operations making money.
- If your business security is breached, the healthcare stimulus bill says that HHS will post your business name on their website. This is a business reputation issue.

✦ DISC has put together an assessment plan for those of you who digitally store, process or transmit patient data. We help you with short term information security goals and developing successful long term strategic objectives.

✦ DISC performs a comprehensive risk assessment and applicability of the assessment scope is based on initial profile assessment questionnaires.

Due diligence is met by virtue of HIPAA compliance, which reduces your security risks and business liabilities
